It may not display this or other websites correctly. You should upgrade or use an alternative browser. I never have had one like this i was wondering if someone could tell me how to use this. What does the different stops mean. Im having some problems determining the draw weight adjustment. Any help and advice would be appreciated. The trouble is, I dont believe the bow is set to its max weight, and in the manual online they have description of two limb pockets, hard stop and vibration dampening. I see no rubber on the pocket, so by the book it should be bottomed to the riser. This bow was an rts model, so it should have been tuned at the factory. Wholesale sports had their paws on it and after the service and help I recieved I dont trust anything is right. I dont want to lose my bow for 2 weeks at the archery shop, and I have no money to spend on it anyways. Another question, If I do have to take it and pay to have it set properly, is there someplace where I can shoot the bow and have assistance tuning all aspects correctly Ill find myself a good bow tech somewhere. Athabasca I hae been told has a very decent PSE rep. Should I call the man and make an appointment or will I have to leave my rig there Im having some problems determining the draw weight adjustment. Another question, If I do have to take it and pay to have it set properly, is there someplace where I can shoot the bow and have assistance tuning all aspects correctly here we go again which wholesale had there paws on it north or south, employe name They were great to me. Ruined my set up and then would not fix it The guy tried hard I believe, but just doesnt have the experience. I hear good and bad and average stuff about every shop within 100kms, probably cause you cant please everybody 100% of the time. That being said I got alot of help from poeple on here, did a whack of reading and I tuned her up myself. http://coyada.com/up_images/up_images/corningware-electrics-slow-cooker-manual.xml

Im not saying its perfect, but I played with my rest and tiller after increasing the draw and decreasing let off. It tears bullet holes at any distance on paper and holds beautifully. Im still unsure exactly what my draw weight is but its maxed out and should be close to 70lbs. Bring on the moose in a few days. Yours has operator error BIG TIMED The bow company has slowly been faling way behind over the years, not real sure why other than poor business managment. I understand the warranty stuff is becoming a pain as well. Ive said it before and Ill say it again, best bow on the market. Ive said it before and Ill say it again, best bow on the market. Besides any model Bowtech, Hoyt, or Mathews than sure! D I understand the warranty stuff is becoming a pain as well. Like I said. my bow has no problems. the operator on the other hand. D The 2012 line up is crazy!!! Did you ask them why they didnt like working on them They produce a great quantity of quality equipment at a very affordable price, available almost anywhere. Seems like they are doing something right! No Im just messin with ya. I like PSE just as much as Hoyt and Mathews but Bowtech is still my favorite. Nothing else felt as good in my hands or as smooth to draw. I have just over 1000 arrows through it in the last two months and love it. But then again, I havent had any problems with it.D. My wife shoots one and it works great.<http://anfauglir.com/images/corningware-electric-slow-cooker-manual.xml>

I dont think they are hard to work on I think it is finding parts I am absolutely thrilled with this bow. Fast and smooth!! Mathews makes a great bow but I am very glad I made the switch. I wasnt aware they had any more problems than others I wasnt aware they had any more problems than others They dont. I havent heard of anybody that doesnt like their XForce Pro series bow. Omen, Dream Season Evo, Axe or Vendetta. Great bows. No issues up to this point, anyway. I dont have a answer, but maybe it could be a trainning issue Other than that had multiple shops that got bullet holes out of my omen, but keeping strings from stretching was the hard part. Shot the Dream Season XS bought it right away. I love my PSE. Neighbor got a Stinger, which put me on the path of deciding to upgrade. His is quite and fast. I found it top heavy, but for the price, had it felt comfortable holding it, Id have gone and got one. Not a bad price for the rigged out bow. I will likely get the Omen next year. Very Funny right there!!! Keep them coming! I love my PSE! PSE has be around for a long time for there stuff Not to be any good. Those who bash PSE must have not be shooting a bow in the early 80s.Loved it and kinda wish I had kept it as a back up! Good bows. Oh thats just wrong lol. Na I think they are great affordable bows. I have about 2,000 arrows through it so far.Putting a new string on it after this season thats about it. Why do you think Mathews had to pay all those royalties for the M6, M7, and Xlr8 designs I had a VendettaXS and kick myself in the rear for selling it. My M6 will be gone soon and I will be back to PSE but Ill never get rid of my Hoyt! lol If anything should be knocked down its the Bone Collector line of any company. It seems like crappy companies pay Wadell big money to use his name so they can sell their product. Even good companies seem to throw is name on stuff so they can lower their quality and still sell big. Sent from my HTC EVO using Tapatalk.

Neighbor got a Stinger, which put me on the path of deciding to upgrade. Not a bad price for the rigged out bow. Most PSE bows are fairly easy to work on. The X force, Omen, and Vendetta can be a real hassle in the bow press. Even our X press with adapters has some issues when changing strings and cables. Had a Vendetta in the press the other day replacing the stings and limbs kept trying to walk of the adapter. Pain in the rump to work on. Worked on an Evo last week and it was much easier than Vendetta XS. It seems the wider the limbs are the more stable they are. Their other bows that are not quad limbs are a piece of cake to work on. I will take and work on one at my shop any day. The EZ Press works wonders on them. As for target it will take a whole lot for me to get rid of my Money Maker aka They Money Taker. I was sad to see them get rid of it but I did happen to get the very last one to ever leave the PSE factory.The pressing can be a little tricky, but no more than bowtechs or mathews at times. I shoot a bowmadness and love it. THE ONLY drawback I will say is that with the Xforce design, the constant load on the string does tend to stretch it a little faster than some, but Ill trade a little of my string life for the drastically increased performance any day. Plus, I will have to give it to PSE hands down for customer service. I put a call into them about a customers bow that had a problem I couldnt figure out, we couldnt get it fixed, and their regional rep was at my store at 8am the next morning with tools and parts in hand, couldnt ask for better customer service. It caused me to start doing my own bow work, Im not sure what theyre talking about. One of easiest companies to work with. They are as easy to work with as Mathews.And have you shot the 12 bows yet.

smooth quiet and fastfaster than Mathews and Hoyt who knows what Bowtech is doing this yr I say this GO SHOOT ONE ESPECIALLY THE EVO OR VENDETTA and you will retract your comments and all the rumors you have heard and you will more than likely be the owner of a new PSE. I was the same for a while from hearing people bash PSE with rumore from no experience and refused to try one and them BAM I tried the EVO, and well you can see I just posted what got delivered to my house to day in another thread on here!!! I think it is the Omen Pro Rwc I would like have more play time with one though. Omen, Dream Season Evo, Axe or Vendetta. Great bows. Dont forget the Treestand GX. Bad to the bone bows!;b I went to Cinnamon Creek and talked with Joe and Joey when I was looking to buy a new bow, kind of had my heart set on a Bowtech Invasion, after shooting them both the PSE felt better. Yes the price played a little into decision. This comes from a 15 yr Hoyt owner. But here is one reason. A while back Pete founder let his son come in and run the company. He then took a back seat and allowed his son to bring in more plastic parts etc.As of recent Pete has come back and one can tell the quality of their bows has increased. That being said. We have never had an issue working on PSE bows or dealing with warranty. Just my opinion. At that time all bows had risers poured by outside sources. Well a foundry screwed up and sent PSE a bunch of risers with a fault in the handle of the riser. Instant bashing of PSE. Pse went to inhouse machining there bows from a single bilt of aluminium and cured that all company followed that lead PSE has always been a quality bow. Ron PSE owns more patents on bows than anyone else in the business. Ive said it before and Ill say it again, best bow on the market. x2;b Doesnt stick when I only see one every blue moon.

I have CRS, and theres never a manual nearbyp Did you ask them why they didnt like working on them They produce a great quantity of quality equipment at a very affordable price, available almost anywhere. Seems like they are doing something right. Amen! PSEs have always been at the top of my list, Ive been using the same NOVA for over eleven years, plenty of dead critters, just recently decided to upgrade to an OMEN, mainly so I can hand my old NOVA down to my son.;b I love it and it shoots straight. When I upgrade I will stay with pse. There is no better hunting bow on the market IMO than a 20072008 XForce HF. The Elite Z28, Mathews SBXT, and Dream Season Evo run a very close second. I have an 08 XForce 6 that shoots 353 ibo measured DL and DW, 5gpp, and had a Dream Season HF that IBOD at 348. Ive never shot a hunting bow that was more quiet and shock free than either of them. The local shop here has no problems working on it. PSE all the way Id like to see your review of the Dream Season Evo if ya aint done one already with several different arrow weights through the chrono. Kinda like you did with the Invasion IIRC Neighbor got a Stinger, which put me on the path of deciding to upgrade. I shot the stinger and hated the way it felt and at full draw it was kind of a fight, but 3rd arrow split my first arrow. Excellent bow for youth or ladies. This bow was only used for around 5 shots but my wife needs something with an even lower draw weight. Comes with matching Weber sling and stabilizer. I can adjust draw weight and length within above specs before shipment if you are unable to do so. Comes with original packaging and all paperwork. Free free to ask for more photos. Check, money order or contact me for other payment methods. This single cam bow comes with the ability of easily setting the draw length as well as the let off the way you like it.

Hunters often choose between the XL and 3G, but since you have a much shorter bow with the 3G it works better if you do more hunting and less 3D. If you do a larger percentage of 3D or target shooting where bow length doesn't matter as much as when you hunt, or if you don't mind the longer length then the XL gives you most performance. For this review we went with the XL. High shooting speed. Smooth draw cycle and feel. Quality built and first grade paint job. Lasts long, very durable. This is a bow that has stayed in demand, and newer versions have set new benchmarks in the topend compound bow category. This prompted PSE to make some changes such that the Madness XL 2012 comes improved in terms of shooting speed and letoff compared to its predecessors. This is a compound bow that hunters, and tournament archers can fall upon without buying pricey third party customizations. With a shooting speed of more than 335 fps, it can smash through wood, steel and flesh that stand at a 40 yards target range. PSE's Bow Madness XL is a complete compound bow for any archery enthusiast and this is one of the most sold bows online. It is very comfortable to hold, and the rubber padding accommodates large and small hands easily. It is hardly felt while using the compound bow for long periods, so the shape or placing of the grip will not come between your concentration and aiming the compound bow. There is some noise when you shoot, which cannot be eliminated, but it is not enough to be of any disturbance whatsoever. The vibration is also low, and whatever gets through the dampeners, can be reduced by wearing an archer's glove. Even at long range over 60 yards it has pinpoint precision. The Aeries Sight is a great aid and doesn't come in the way like 3pin sights or other savvy compound bow sights. Highgrain arrows result in lower speeds, so these are not preferred in long range shots.

PSE has always produced compound bow that will be your hunting partner through thick and thin and Madness XL is no different. Maybe the factory string will come off within a year, but it can be replaced with better and more expensive strings from Fast Flight, Hoyt or Zebra. The ReadytoShoot package is a steal with all the instruction manuals, warranty on the accessories and the collection in the package. Getting the Madness XL 2012 will be a great decision to make compared to the alternatives in this price range. PSE's customer support is also good, as our query on replacement of the string in 2014 was handled really fast! All in all.
